New President to Lead Blue Mountains Conservation Society

The Blue Mountains Conservation Society welcomes new president Dr Annette Sartor who was elected at the Society's recent Annual General Meeting.

"It is a privilege and an honour to be elected as President of the Blue Mountains Conservation Society for this next 12 months," said Dr Sartor in her acceptance speech.

Dr Sartor brings a lifelong commitment to environmental protection, shaped by early experiences growing up near what is now Cocoparra National Park and a deep connection to the landscapes of the Greater Blue Mountains World Heritage Area.

With a background in ecology and education, her career spans secondary science teaching, outdoor environmental education, and sustainability education across TAFE and university sectors. She spent nine years as a Discovery Ranger with the NSW National Parks and Wildlife Service, fostering public engagement with the natural values of the Blue Mountains, and her academic work continues to focus on sustainability education.

Having served on the Society's Management Committee for the past three years, Annette brings both experience and strategic insight to the role. She is inspired by the Society's longstanding leadership in environmental advocacy and is committed to strengthening its impact and deepening connections across the Blue Mountains community.

Outgoing President Annette Cam and the outgoing Management Committee were also recognised for their outstanding service to both the Society and the Blue Mountains community.
